LIVE UNITED

“Sow came to the United States in March 2018 from a Karenni refugee camp in Thailand. This was after three years of working to be approved through the refugee resettlement program.

After completing a very long process, Sow found out that he was approved to come to the United States. “When I left Thailand, I already knew I was coming to Austin,” he said. He came knowing he had relatives, friends, and Karenni community to look forward to there.

He first connected with ILCM through his involvement with the Welcome Center.

Currently, Sow and his family are working with an ILCM staff member to adjust their status to that of Lawful Permanent Residents. Sow is very grateful for all the support he’s received so far and is excited for the future in the United States.

“We came here to get an education, to have a better future for us and for our kids and grand-kids, and hopefully to use that knowledge to give back to the community both here and back home,” he said. Sow Reh envisions a long future for himself and his family in the United States.
